Born in New York in 1964, Mia Abelson has been practicing the profession of painter and sculptor since 1990. Thus in the early 90s Mia devoted herself to the fine arts. She had her first solo exhibition in 1995 and since then her works have never ceased to impress collectors and art lovers everywhere.

Mia has since won over twenty National and International awards, and produced several articles for the magazine International Artist. She has been the subject of several television and written interviews and her paintings are part of private and corporate collections. Mia's works can be found in galleries across the United States.

Mia Abelson is a world recognized oil painter. She masters the colors that make up the light of the moment like no other. Mia is a member of the Portrait Society of America and she teaches painting from her studio in New York. She also gives art lessons on a voluntary basis to the children of her community every Saturday. She is a multidisciplinary artist who enjoys painting and using various mediums to achieve one piece of work. Through her art, she brings us closer to nature and invites us to a peaceful, introspective universe.

Mia strives for timelessness in her work. Her traditional painting style is perfectly suited to illustrate the unchanging nature of human experience. These are not figures as mere props, but reflections of our collective experience, our very human hopes, dreams, and emotions. Her landscapes stand out as portraits of the land. Painted using a monochromatic grey-green with warm brown undertones, and adding color only to sections of the canvas, she treats her subject like a portrait. This innovative approach creates inviting, peaceful scenes.

A member of the International Guild of Realism, Mia Abelson has exhibited widely in North America and Europe. Her paintings have graced the covers of various magazines and books and in 2005 she was featured and interviewed for television.
