An educator and administrator for more than 30 years, Kieran Stack recently retired as the assistant principal of Brewster High School and Henry H. Wells Middle School in Brewster, New York. He accepted this role in 1996 and received his tenure in 1999, during which time he led a diverse population of more than 1,200 students and a staff of 120. Dedicated to ensuring that each student in the district received an engaging and high-quality education, Kieran Stack worked with teachers to modernize their pedagogy and continuously learn new ways of presenting content, managing classrooms, and resolving student conflict.

Kieran Stack joined the Brewster Central School District having served for two years in a similar capacity at Sacred Heart High School in Yonkers, New York. There, he worked with staff in multiple disciplines to develop actionable strategies for meeting students' academic and behavioral needs. He took on this position after serving as the school's business teacher for eight years, during which time he created a work-study program with local businesses to engage seniors in the working world.

Mr. Stack holds a master of business administration from Iona College, where he focused on organizational behavior. He also earned his school administration and supervision certificate from the state of New York.
