Abdallah Fadel began his career as a portfolio manager with Lebanon's World Investment Services, where he primarily focused on trading currencies. In 2004, Abdallah Fadel enrolled at Western Michigan University to pursue a bachelor's degree in finance and, at the same time, began working as a treasury analyst with Kellogg Company. After earning his bachelor's degree, he joined Whirlpool Corporation as a finance manager responsible for overseeing a global forecasting cycle. In 2011, he completed an MBA from Michigan State University and was subsequently promoted to global controller of the food preparation and home cleaning products division, in which he was tasked with leading international finance teams for two business units.

Since 2013, Abdallah Fadel has worked in a variety of roles for Herman Miller. After joining the Holland, Michigan-based firm as director of finance and CFO of North America business, he later assumed the role of director of finance for the firm's global research and development and new product commercialization business sector. Since 2015, he has held the title of director and general manager of new business ventures and technology solutions.
